Introduction to the Constitution I

Spring, 1974 Mr. Storing

This is the second course of the three-quarter sequence dealing with the constitution of the United States. The focus will be on the text of the Constitution, and the form will be provided by the text. Supreme Court opinions and other materials will be considered principally as they illuminate the meaning of that text or attempt to resolve its ambiguities. During this quarter, Article III through VII and those portions of the amendments dealing with procedural rights will be considered. The final course in the sequence will be offered in the Winter of 1975 and will deal with the remaining protections of individual rights, particularly those in the first and fourteenth amendments. Each course is a prerequisite for the next.

The main readings will be The Federalist (Rossiter edition, Mentor); Edward S. Corwin's The Constitution and What It Means Today (13th ed), a provision-by-provision analysis of the Constitution; and Supreme Court opinions. Most of the opinions will be found in the assigned casebook, Gerald Gunther and Noel Dowling, Constitutional Law: Cases and Materials, 8th edition, and its 1973 Supplement. These are cited in the reading list with the Gunther & Dowling page references underlined, as follows: Colegrove v Green 328 US 549 (1946), GD 175-177. Page references in Gunther and Dowling often include additional notes and case discussions, which should be read along with the main case. Cases not in Gunther and Dowling will be found in the U.S. Reports; these citations are underlined thus: J.W. Hampton Co. v U.S. 276 US 394 (1928). Other assigned material is on reserve. Students may also wish to consult C. Herman Pritchett's The American Constitution.
